NOTES:

1. The division was a second line Territorial Army formation, which was formed in 1939 as a duplicate of the 49th (West Riding) Infantry Division. The 46th (North Midland) Division, one of the fourteen divisions that comprised the Territorial Force in 1908, was disbanded in 1936. The reformed formation did not (at least officially) use the title 'North Midland' or 'North Midland and West Riding' Division as appears in some texts. It was deployed to France in April 1940 on training and labour duties, at that time being poorly equipped and ill-trained. It suffered heavy casualties during the German invasion of France, being evacuated from Dunkirk on 2 June 1940. It remained in the U.K. re-equipping and refitting until leaving for North Africa on 6 January 1943. It landed on 17 January and came under command of 1st Army. It fought in the Tunisian campaign under command of V Corps and IX Corps. It transferred to X Corps in July 1943, and landed with the corps at Salerno in Italy on 9 September 1943. The division fought in the battles for the capture of Naples between 22 September and 1 October, the Volturno Crossing between 12 and 15 October, and the capture of Monte Camino between 5 and 9 November 1943, all under command of X Corps. It left X Corps command on 10 March 1944, and left Italy on 16 March 1944 bound for Egypt. It moved to Palestine in April 1944 and then back to Egypt in June. The division returned to Italy on 3 July 1944 and joined V Corps on 10 August. It fought in the Gothic Line battles between the 25 August and 22 September, including the battle for Coriano between 3 and 15 September, and the Rimini Line between 14 and 21 September. It transferred to X Corps on 12 December during the Lamone Crossing. The division was withdrawn from the line, and was hurriedly transferred to Greece on 14 January 1945 to fight in the Greek Civil War. It returned to Italy on 11 April 1945, and rejoined V Corps on 5 May 1945. It remained with that corps until at least August 1945, moving with the corps to Austria on 12 May. It was disbanded in 1946, and being a second line formation, it was not reformed when the Territorial Army was reconstituted in 1947.
2. This unit was the divisional machine gun battalion.
3. This regiment left the division in November 1944 to be disbanded and was not replaced.
