Headquarters Staff of the Army in India

Headquarters of the Army in India was a pre-war command covering the entire country of British India.

The headquarters consisted of four branches:

- General Staff Branch,
- Adjutant General's Branch,
- Quarter-Master-General's Branch,
- Master-General of the Ordnance Branch,
- Engineer-in-Chief's Branch.

The Commander-in-Chief was a General in the Indian Army. This was usually a four-year posting. The C-in-C had a staff of five, an Assistant Military Secretary (Personal) (Lieutenant Colonel), three Aides-de-Camp (one Major and three Captains) and a personal surgeon (Major).

At the beginning of the Second World War, the headquarters was redesignated as the General Headquarters (G.H.Q.), India Command.

The Quarter-Master-General's Branch

The Quarter-Master-General (Q.M.G.) was responsible for the supply and distribution of equipment, food, ammunition, petrol, oil and lubricants to operational units. The branch was responsible also for moving units from place to place, and their billeting or accommodation. All forms of movement in the Army, whether by animal, vehicle, inland waterway or railway came under the jurisdiction of the Q.M.G.. The Q.M.G. was a Lieutenant General or General's appointment. The Branch comprised two major directorates, each headed by a Major General, and four smaller directorates headed by a Brigadier or Colonel.

These directorates were:

- |   |                  |
|---|------------------|
| • Directorate of Movements and Quartering | – Major General, |
| • Directorate of Supplies and Transport   | – Major General, |
| • Directorate of Veterinary Services      | – Brigadier,     |
| • Directorate of Remounts                 | – Brigadier,     |
| • Directorate of Farms                    | – Colonel,       |
| • Directorate of Labour                   | – Brigadier.     |

The Director of Movements and Quartering also acted as the Deputy Quarter-Master-General. At the beginning of the war, the strength of the Quarter-Master-General's Branch was thirty-four officers and one-hundred and seven clerks. In August 1945, the strength was three-hundred and thirty-eight officers, and one-thousand and eighty-four clerks.

From 1939 until 1941, the branch was concerned primarily with the expansion of the army in India, and meeting the requirements of the Indian formations and units sent to the Middle East. After the 8th December 1941, the focus turned to defeating Japan.

Directorate of Movements and Quartering

In June 1940, a separate post as Deputy Q.M.G. was created with another Major General being posted to the Branch. The Q.1. Section dealt with the overall coordination of the work of the Branch, and liaison with other branches and agencies. By September 1942, the Q.1 Section had divided into three sub-sections, on:

- Operations,
- Plans,
- Coordination.

The Q.2 Section was responsible for movements. In September 1939, there were just four officers and eighteen clerks in the section. The closure of the Mediterranean brought additional work to this section, which by 1942 had grown to six sub-sections, with a total of twenty-nine officers and one-hundred and ten clerks. In February 1942, the Directorate of Movements and Quartering was split to form two separate organisations. The first Director of Quartering was authorised as a Colonel's appointment, but this was raised to that of a Brigadier a year later.

This came about due to the requirement to increase significantly the barrack and storage accommodation within India. It was responsible for the works commissioned in behalf of the U.S. Army. From July 1945, the directorate also assumed responsibility for projects on behalf of the Royal Navy.

Because of the increased workload of this directorate, the work of fire services, canteens and hirings were separated out into new directorates.

Directorate of Transportation

In May 1941, the new Directorate of Transportation was created, with a Brigadier heading the new Directorate. The primary reason for the creation of this directorate was the Iraq campaign and the need to provide transportation of stores in that large theatre. In December 1941, that focus changed back to the eastern Frontier of India.

The requirement given to the directorate was to develop the Assam lines of communication to a daily capacity of 7,400 tons of military stores, and to maintain eight divisions overseas. Although the majority of the directorate were based in Delhi, detached personnel served at Calcutta, Madras, Bombay and in Assam. By August 1944, the directorate had sixty officers, and one-hundred and seventy-seven clerks. A major change was effected with effect from 18 January 1944 with the appointment of a Major General as Deputy Quarter-Master-General with specific responsible for Movements and Transportation. The work of these two directorates became better coordinated, with joint sections for statistics and planning established.

Directorate of Supplies and Transport

The Directorate of Supplies and Transport was the largest in the Branch. Its peacetime establishment was fourteen officers and thirty-four clerks. As the Army in India grew from about 250,000 men to nearly 3,000,000, so correspondingly the needs for supply of foodstuffs, stores, petrol, oil and lubricants grew. This directorate pioneered the use of air dispatch, supply, and air drops in this theatre. This proved to be a key factor in the development of the tactics used to such effect in Burma, for example, the battle of the Administrative Box and the Chindits would not have happened without the benefit of air dispatch and supply.

In July 1942, a separate Inspectorate of Foodstuffs was created which was responsible for purchasing and testing the large amount of food required by the Army. On 20 April 1945, this inspectorate was enlarged into a full directorate. By the end of the war, this directorate had a strength of one-hundred and nine officers, and two-hundred and seventy-two clerks.

Directorates of Remounts and Veterinary Services

The Directorate of Remounts and Directorate of Veterinary Services were both small directorates, and they were both gradually losing importance with the increasing mechanization of the Army. The former comprised three officers and eight clerks, and the latter three officers and five clerks.

As the war progressed, both continued to decline, but with the entry of Japan into the war, and a renewed operational requirement for animal transport and the welfare of these animals, meant that these two directorates grew slightly to the end of the war. At the end of the war, the Directorate of Remounts had seven officers and thirty-one clerks, and the Directorate of Veterinary Services had nine officers and forty-one clerks.

Directorate of Farms

The Directorate of Farms did not see significant growth during the war, as much of its work was decentralised. It started with two officers and eight clerks and ended the war with three officers and thirteen clerks.

Directorate of Labour

The Directorate of Labour was responsible for the Indian Pioneer Corps, and it oversaw the massive expansion in the amount of labour contracted for Army duties. The director's post was a Brigadier's appointment.

Growth of the Branch

By the end of the war, the Directorates in the Branch were as follows:

- Directorate of Movements – Major General,
- Directorate of Quartering – Brigadier,
- Directorate of Canteens – Colonel,
- Directorate of Transportation – Brigadier,
- Directorate of Supplies and Transport – Major General,
- Inspectorate of the R.I.A.S.C. – Brigadier,
- Directorate of Veterinary Services – Brigadier,
- Directorate of Remounts – Brigadier,
- Directorate of Farms – Colonel,
- Directorate of Labour – Brigadier.

Post War Contraction and Partition

In November 1945 the number of officers based at G.H.Q. India was:

- Lieutenant Generals = 8
- Major Generals = 30
- Brigadiers = 83
- Colonels = 102
- Others = 2,375

With the end of hostilities, the political pressure was raised to rapidly reduce the number of personnel at G.H.Q.. There were already some vacancies as with the introduction of 'Python' leave for British Army who had served more than three years, eight months in the Far East, there was a shortage of suitably trained and experienced staff officers. In the period from August 1945 to November 1945, three Brigadier's posts had already been abolished, and by the end of the year, further reductions planned were:

- Major Generals = 2
- Brigadiers = 15
- Colonels = 20
- Others = 729

G.H.Q. India remained in existence until 15 August 1947, when it was disbanded upon the partition of India and Pakistan. A new Headquarters, Pakistan Army was formed by Northern Command, and a new Headquarters of the Indian Army took over the headquarters in Delhi. A Supreme Commander of British Forces in India and Pakistan was retained for a short period of time under Field Marshal AUCHINLECK to transfer responsibilities to the new armies and to organise the withdrawal of British Army units and British former officers and men of the British Indian Army.

The office of Supreme Commander closed on 1 December 1947 upon the formal retirement of Field Marshal AUCHINLECK. Major General L. G. WHISTLER had been appointed the General Officer Commanding British Troops in India in 1947, and remained in command until the very last British unit, the 1st Bn. The Somerset Light Infantry (Prince Albert's) left on 28 February 1948. The 2nd Bn. The Black Watch (Royal Highland Regiment) had been the last British Army unit to leave Pakistan on 26 February 1948. Some British officers remained in senior positions in both the Indian and Pakistani Armies until well into the 1950's.
